“ Larry Goldbeck and I were connected both through our work in medicine in Vallejo, and in military service. We actually both had a tour together at the Navy Hospital in Yokosuka Japan circa 1982 when we were activated for duty as Navy reserve officers.

He was a good man and a good friend, and I am honored to be his shipmate, colleague, and "tomodachi."

“ Oh, My! What a shock to learn, via Facebook, that Larry had passed. I am so sorry for it. Larry and I go back to the late '70s, when he was the anesthesiologist at Broadway Hospital. And an excellent one: never once did a patient of mine suffer an anesthetic misadventure when under his care. Larry was also my senior in the Naval Reserve in those days; I think he was instrumental in my getting my first of three unit commands. I went to Kaiser and Larry returned to Texas. Only to return to California a few years ago. We became mates once more, Companions in the Naval Order of the United States. Our last few hours spent together were in car rides (we alternated driving duty) to Naval Order meetings in San Francisco. As you can imagine, our conversations were far ranging and challenging. Oh, how I shall miss his Texas accent and his laconic gift of gab...
